Executive Summary

Process

In November 2014, BlackRock increased this series’ strategic allocation to equities across the glide path by varying degrees. Previously, most of the longer-dated funds had lower equity allocations compared with peers, but now they have more. This index-based series is notable for its particularly diversified exposure to international equities and its sizable stake in REITs.

Price

This series’ K shares are among the lowest priced in the target-date mutual fund space. Its Institutional share class is just a few basis points more expensive. However, while the Investor A share class may be better priced than other competitors as a whole, they’re pricey for an index-based series.

Performance

The funds in this series reached their five-year record in 2016. Over the five-year period through December 2017, most of them landed near the middle of the pack. The shortest- and longest-dated funds fared well, but the funds between those two ends of the glide path didn’t stand out, partly because they held less in equities than the typical peer prior to the series’ late-2014 glide path change.

People

Matt O’Hara joined Alan Mason and Amy Whitelaw on the manager roster in November 2016 to better reflect his long-standing influence over the series’ design. BlackRock is one of the largest asset managers in equities than the typical peer prior to the series’ late-2014 glide path change.

Parent

As a result of its size, BlackRock has unparalleled scale and resources and has established a good corporate culture. While managers are showing more conviction in the funds they run by increasing their personal investment, their ownership levels still lag many peers’.

Jeff Holt 02-02-2018

The BlackRock LifePath Index funds have only been around since 2011, but that doesn’t reflect the firm’s long-standing presence on the forefront of the target-date industry. Meanwhile, the index-based approach doesn’t reflect idle management of target-date funds. This series has all the hallmarks in place of a good long-term strategy for investors, resulting in a Morningstar Analyst Rating of Gold.

BlackRock’s history with target-date funds dates back to the 1990s. The firm’s legacy initial offering launched in 1994 and started the target-date industry. Importantly, the firm has remained steadfast in evolving its target-date offerings over the years, often exploring new areas of research before peers. This includes re-examining the asset mix, considering potential asset classes, and incorporating new features, such as deferred annuities (within a separate target-date offering). The firm even revamped its two other target-date offerings in November 2016.

The most recent strategy change to this series occurred in November 2014, when management upped the series’ equity allocation across most of the glide path based on research into investor preferences and behavior, as well as a review of its long-term capital market assumptions. The longest-dated funds remained unchanged with 99% of assets in equities, considerably more than the typical peer. The other funds in the series had previously been relatively equity-light compared with peers, but they now have more or a similar amount in stocks when compared with the norm. Investors 25 years from their target date saw the largest equity allocation increase (roughly 16 percentage points), and, at 91% of assets, its stock allocation comes in well above that of the typical peer. The stock exposure at retirement—the funds’ allocations remain static thereafter—increased by a mere 2 percentage points to 40% from 38%, which remains just below the norm. Matt O’Hara drove the research that instigated many of these updates, and he joined this series’ manager roster in November 2016 to better reflect its long-standing influence on the funds.

Not all the team’s research conclusions result in changes to the series. Still, the team’s well-documented research agenda assures investors that it remains committed to keeping the series in solid shape. For instance, unlike some target-date peers that also invest in index funds, this series does not carve out dedicated exposure to global bonds. The team found that currency risk overwhelmed unhedged exposure, and increased coordination among global central banks, as well as hedging costs, curbed the appeal for hedged exposure. Similarly, the team passed on high-yield bonds and frontier markets.

Meanwhile, this series’ index-based approach helps create a substantial cost advantage. The series’ cost comes in well below the industry average, and the expense ratios of its K share class remain among the lowest in the industry.

Please note that investments in securities (including target-date series funds) are subject to market and other risks and there is no assurance or guarantee that the intended investment objectives will be achieved. Past performance is not a guarantee or security may or may not be sustained in the future and is no indication of future performance. A security investment return and an investor’s principal value will fluctuate so that, at redemption, an investor’s shares may be worth more or less than their original cost. A security’s current investment performance may be higher or lower than the investment performance noted within the Report. Morningstar’s Risk, Return and Star Ratings serve as useful data points with respect to evaluating a target-date fund series’ risk profile.

A current yield percentage is not a reflection of the actual return an investor will receive in all cases as market prices for securities are constantly changing due to such things as market factors. Where a security is denominated in a different currency than the currency of the User or User’s clients, changes in rates of exchange may have an adverse effect on the value, price or income of or from that investment.

Indices noted within the Report are unmanaged, their returns do not include payment of any sales charges or fees an investor would pay to purchase securities, and cannot be invested in directly.

In certain jurisdictions, the Report contents, except for the Morningstar Analyst Rating and key analysis/options, may be shared with the target-date series company prior to publication. In the unlikely event that Morningstar Research Services would change its analysis/options and/or the Morningstar Analyst Rating based on feedback as result of such review, the Report would disclose such a fact.

The Morningstar Analyst Rating™ for Target-Date Fund Series

The Morningstar Analyst Rating™ for Target-Date Fund Series is a forward-looking analysis of a target-date fund series. The Analyst Rating does not express a view on a given asset class or peer group; rather, it seeks to evaluate each target-date fund series within the context of its objective, an appropriate benchmark, and peer group.

The date shown next to the Morningstar Analyst Rating is the date on which the Morningstar Manager Research Analyst assigned or reaffirmed the current rating for the target-date fund series based on the analyst’s latest review and research report for the target-date fund series.

The Five (5) Pillars

Morningstar has identified five key areas that we believe are crucial to predicting the future success of funds: People, Parent, Process, Performance, and Price. Each pillar is evaluated when assessing a fund as well as the interaction between the pillars, which we believe is crucial to understanding a fund’s overall merit.

People

The overall quality of a target-date fund series’ investment team is a significant key to its ability to deliver superior performance relative to its benchmark and/or peers. Evaluating a target-date fund series’ investment team requires that analysts assess several relevant issues including how key decisions are made.

Parent

We believe the parent organization is of utmost importance in evaluating a target-date fund series. The target-date fund series’ management set the tone for key elements of our evaluation, including capacity management, risk management, recruitment and retention of talent, and incentive pay. Beyond these operational areas, we prefer firms that have a culture of stewardship and put investors first to those that are too heavily weighted to salesmanship.

Process

We look for target-date fund series with a performance objective and investment process (for both security selection and portfolio construction) that is sensible, clearly defined, and repeatable. In addition, the portfolio should be constructed in a manner that is consistent with the investment process and performance ob-
Performance
We do not believe past performance is necessarily predictive of future results, and this factor accordingly receives a relatively small weighting in our evaluation process. In particular, we strive not to anchor on short-term performance. However, we do believe that the evaluation of long-term return and risk patterns is vital to determining if a target-date fund series is delivering to our expectations.

Price
To reflect actual investor experience, price is evaluated within the context of the relevant market or cross-border region—for example, the United States, Australia, Canada, or Europe. In recognition of differences in scale and distribution costs in various markets, the level at which a target-date fund series is penalized for high fees or rewarded for low fees can vary with region. In Europe, for example, target-date fund series are penalized if they land in the most expensive quintile of their Morningstar category and are rewarded if they land in the cheapest quintile. The assessment is made using prospectus expense ratios, but in the case of target-date fund series with performance fees, expenses are evaluated excluding any performance fees and then the structure of the performance fee is evaluated separately.

Morningstar Analyst Ratings
Morningstar Analyst Ratings are assigned on a five-tier scale running from Gold to Negative. The top three ratings, Gold, Silver, and Bronze, all indicate that our analysts think highly of a target-date fund series; the difference between them corresponds to differences in the level of analyst conviction in a target-date fund series' ability to outperform its benchmark and peers through time, within the context of the level of risk taken.

Gold
Represents target-date fund series that our analyst has the highest-confidence in for that given investment mandate. By giving a target-date fund series a Gold rating, we are expressing an expectation that it will outperform its relevant performance benchmark and/or peer group within the context of the level of risk taken over the long term (defined as a full market cycle or at least five years). To earn a Gold rating, a target-date fund series must distinguish itself across the five pillars that are the basis for our analysis.

Silver
Represents target-date fund series our analyst has high-confidence in, but not in all of the five pillars. With those fundamental strengths, we expect these target-date fund series will outperform their relevant performance benchmark and/or peer group within the context of the level of risk taken over the long term (defined as a full market cycle or at least five years).

Bronze
Represents target-date fund series that have advantages that clearly outweigh any disadvantages across the pillars, giving analyst the conviction to award them a positive rating. We expect these target-date fund series to beat their relevant performance benchmark and/or peer group within the context of the level of risk taken over the long term (defined as a full market cycle or at least five years).

Neutral
Represents target-date fund series in which our analysts don't have a strong positive or negative conviction. In our judgment, these target-date fund series are not likely to deliver standout returns but, they aren't likely to seriously underperform their relevant performance benchmark and/or peer group either.

Negative
Represents target-date fund series that possess at least one flaw that our analysts believe is likely to significantly hamper future performance, such as high fees or an unstable management team. Because of these faults, we believe these target-date fund series are inferior to most competitors and will likely underperform their relevant performance benchmark and/or peer group, within the context of the level of risk taken, over a full market cycle.

Morningstar Research Services may also use two other designations in place of a rating:

Under Review
This designation means that a change that occurred with the target-date fund series or at the target-date fund series company requires further review to determine the impact on the rating.

Not Ratable
This designation is used only where we are providing a Report on a new strategy or on a strategy where there are no relevant comparators, but where investors require information as to suitability.

For more information about our Analyst Rating methodology please go to http://corporate1.morningstar.com/Research/Library/

Morningstar Star Ratings
The Morningstar Star Rating is a proprietary data point that is quantitatively driven. Target-date fund series are rated from one to five stars based on how well the target-date fund series performed (after adjusting for risk and accounting for sales charges) in comparison to similar target-date fund series. Within each Morningstar Category, the top 10% of target-date fund series receive 5 stars and the bottom 10% receives 1 star. Target-date fund series are rated for up to three time periods—three-, five-, and ten-years—and these ratings are combined to produce an overall star rating, which is noted within the Report. target-date fund series with less than three years of history are not rated. Star Ratings are based entirely on a mathematical evaluation of past performance. Star Ratings are in no way to be considered a buy or sell signal nor should be viewed as a statement of fact.

Equity-Related Data Points
The Report lists the top ten holdings in the target-date fund series as of the dated noted. For each underlying holding, a series of data points is provided including, where applicable, that security's Economic Moat rating as of the date noted.

Economic Moat
The concept of an economic moat plays a vital role in our equity analyst's qualitative assessment of a firm's long-term investment potential, but also in the actual calculation of its fair value estimate. An economic moat is a structural feature that allows a firm to sustain excess profits over a long period of time. We define economic profits as returns on invested capital (or ROIC) over and above our estimate of a firm's cost of capital, or weighted average cost of capital (or WACC). Without a moat, profits are more susceptible to competition. We have identified five sources of economic moats: intangible assets, switching costs, network effect, cost advantage, and efficient scale.

Companies with a narrow moat are those we believe are more likely than not to achieve normalized excess returns for at least the next 10 years. Wide-moat companies are those in which we have very high confidence that excess returns will remain for 10 years, with excess returns more likely than not to remain for at least 20 years. The longer a firm generates economic profits, the higher its intrinsic value. We believe low-quality, no-moat companies will see their normalized returns gravitate toward the firm's cost of capital more quickly than companies with moats.
